the only two pieces of evidence provided in the documentary are:

the first example is a photograph of Ehmetjan Qasimi wearing a badge that supposedly represents the ETR. Qasimi was a member of the Soviet communist party and a leader of the second ETR. <https://t.co/IUvRCp9Nai>

The person interviewed says this symbol shouldn't appear in a textbook.

the 2nd example she gave was a folktale about 7 Uyghur girls jumping off a cliff when trapped by Han Chinese soldiers. She says this incites ethnic hatred.

on the other hand, Chinese textbooks I grew up <https://t.co/hxo0gFW2ZY> with are full of stories about Han "ethnic heroes" ■■■■ sacrificing their lives when there was a war between the Han and other ethnic groups.

That's all the evidence given in this documentary about violence and extremism in these previous textbooks.

what we also learn from this production is that all those involved, the former directors general of the education department, the director of the publishing house, and the chief editor, were sentenced to death or got life sentence because of these textbooks. <https://t.co/FgF5TgP7mY> this video ends with the current editor showing the reporter the current version of the textbook.

the new textbook begins with China's national emblem/flag, the statement "we're Chinese", and the flag-raising ceremony, all before the alphabet table. <https://t.co/KKPxK3Xwev> and the statement "We are Chinese".

后面有“我们是中国人”

Here is the flag-raising ceremony.
这是升旗仪式

yes. the rest of the video is these former officials and former publishers, who have been sentenced to death or life imprisonment, "confessing" their "crimes".
