This is such a good read about Dan Price's psychopath/narcissist red flags

https://t.co/VPAvjVQjJU

This is also an excellent point. A man who makes a point of appearing -- and being congratulated on -- appearing to be extremely laid is always going to be pretty high in narcissism https://t.co/7oGLbkM9ar

So many good, astute observations in this piece about red flags of narcissism and psychopathy in men. Not taking responsibility for their own actions is a big one -- narcissists only see themselves as heroes or victims. https://t.co/zUMFNvUpGL

After discussing Dan's personal trip to the Philippines on the company dime, Dan shows Stephen photos from the excursion, including snaps of an unexpected meeting with former Miss Pakistan, Shanzay Hayat.

“That was a great trip. Shanzay is a great girl, but we’re just friends. Very cool.”

It's weird, right? Healthy, respectful men don't feel the need to bring up dating or not dating whenever a woman's name or picture comes up. If you say, I just happened to meet this person and we took some photos together on a beach, there's no reason to clarify whether or not you've had sex.

Stephen writes that Dan isn't viewing these as personal mistakes—but person*nel*. We've all known someone who thinks they've never played a part in any of their problems. We see it with lots of leaders and self-help gurus. Their problems are not like our problems, apparently. Their problems are haters who just hate them and loved ones who don't understand their vision.

Dan's asked a valid question given his circumstances in 2016—why invite more press when he's got these bad allegations against him? His answer is bewildering.

“Hey, I’m a narcissist, like all millennials. Did I raise the salaries for purely benevolent reasons? Yes, but I also wanted > Dragged by the ankles. Dropped onto hardwood floors. Near-drowned in tubs. Smashed into walls. Bashed with objects. Strangled. Slapped. Kicked. Days and nights hiding under beds, in closets, in cars. Strapped over a lap, repeatedly slapped like a battered child for being unworthy, unthinking, unbalanced. Forced to make unsustainable concessions. Extramarital sex for him. Isolation for her. Ongoing PTSD that affects career decisions, personal relationships. The list of alleged abuses goes on ad nauseam.

At least three women say Dan secretly filmed them. Another says he pressured (or formerly evangelical) men, theirs is a distinct and destructive brand of hypocrisy. Such men are absolutely intent on fulfilling their sexual "Needs" with a capital N. As an result, many Christian women wind up feeling safest dating non-Christian, never-been-Christian men instead.

As much as they might talk a good selfless and altruistic game, these male sex addicts and offenders are entirely motivated by getting laid. It goes hand-in-hand with their deep-rooted misogyny.

So, when I read from several women that Dan very was pushy about sex, and simply wouldn't let it go, sometimes from the very first conversation or date, that

Remember that Dan Price also lied about his employees giving him a Tesla, and it was a publicity stunt devised by his marketing department

"That was his idea completely," said Mr. Pirkle and confirmed by Matt Dho, who worked in the marketing department for four years. Mr. Price said that was not true, and "the idea that some people are trying to soil this cherished memory is deeply hurtful."

But Alyssa O'Neal, the then 21-year-old employee who people thought had suggested the Tesla gift at the time, said in an interview that one of Mr. Price's senior lieutenants actually made the suggestion in a small meeting and told her to take credit.

The stunt got attention from the mainstream press, but it quickly faded.
